Whether the United States shall bar its "back door" against the great influe of "cheap labor" from Mexico is one of the most keenly debated questions before Congress, a two-year study of the conditions under tehich this vast racial movement is taking place and of the social, political, and economic problems involved has been summarized for The Christian Science Moniton in six articles, of which the foliowing is the second,

By STUART R. WARD

By STUART R, WARD

Until a few years ago, large agricultural interests in the United States often imported "contract" laborers direct from Mexico, advancing transportation and agreeing to employ them for a stipulated time.

Even today it is commonly reported the great agricultural corporations who employ hundreds, sometimes thousands of Mexicans, encourage immigration in a roundabout manner. "Labor scouts" are sent into Mexico to circulate among the pueblos stories of high wages to be made in certain parts of the United States: the "grapevine telegraph" does the rest.

Peons migrate northward and get across the border, legally or illegally, as their circumstances and opportunities permit. Once across, they are picked up by representatives of the employers who transport them to the territory in which their labor is needed.

ITALY IS CENTER OF CONFERENCE OVER TANGIER

Franco-Italian Relations Greatly Turn on Result of Present Conversations

By SISLEY HUDDLESTON PARIS_The Tangier conference opened at the Quai d'Orsay today. It is expected to last for several weeks. Italy is the central figure of these negotiations, and its mere presence at the green table is already a triumph for Italian diplomacy. Neither France nor Spain has anything further to ask. They have settled their affairs. England is merely an onlooker, resolved that whatever arrangements are made within the framework of the existing Tangler statute they shall conform with British interests.

statute they shall conform with British interests.

It is Italy which has demands. It is Italy which, absent from the conversations in 1923, has obstinately refused to ratify the constitution of the international port and has maintained on the spot a plenipotentiary minister refusing to replace him, like the other powers with a simple consul. Italy persisted in ignoring the Mixed Tribunal. The Latin Prime Minister even sent to Tangier an officer of the Caribineers, whose business it was to symbolize the persistent protests of Rome.

Change Over European Scene

Change Over European Scene Italy must be present wherever the Mediterranean problem is discussed. That is the Italian maxim, and since the request was refused in 1923 and it is admitted now, it is obvious a considerable change has come over the European scene. Italy was then weak and France strong. The French argued that Italy, by the convention in 1912, was given a free hand in Tripolitana, but in return promised not to interest itself in Morocco.

and others then opened such a school and requested the public authority to take over the same. The authority again refused, on the ground that the school was superfluous. The officials meanwhile offered to appoint Roman Catholic teachers where it was desired to give children religious instruction at the same time as other pupils were similarly taught, but the proposal was declined.

The court is now asked to declare not to interest itself in Morocco.

Italy argued that this accord applied to French Morocco, but not to the international town of Tangler.

Italy appears to be right on this point. At any rate, already this principal calls of participating in the point. At any rate, already this principal claim of participating in the conference is granted. Italy asks that its nationals should figure in the local government; that there should be an Italian judge on the Mixed Tribunal, an Italian lieutenant in the gendarmie, an Italian municipal functionary charged with hygiene and an Italian place in the Assembly.

If an agreement is reached on the trivial administrative innova-tions in Tangier, Franco-Italian reas will be generally improved.

Indeed, this conference may prove critical because it is impossible to confine the conversations to the immediate subjects on the program. Writing upon the political significance of the Tanthe political significance of the Tangler conference, the Tribuna points out that its essential importance lies in the formation of a united front among the great powers to settle a problem which hitherto has divided them, also because this united front will enable the interested powers to erect a barrier against the violent economic pressure of North America which is beginning to be felt on the Mediterranean, as well as check any attempts at rebellion on the part of the Arabs. There are still important problems waiting solution, adds the Tribuna, among them being a definition of the position and status of Italians in Tunisia and the delimitation of the southern frontiers of Lybia.

BRITISH ECONOMIST DISCUSSES REPARATION

BY WIRELMAN TO THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR BERLIN—There is no reason to believe that the reparation question is one of the causes of the present economic depression in Europe, nor that it will become a difficult problem in the near future, W. The sums Germany is paying as reparations were flowing back into the country in the form of foreign credits, he continued, and it would take a

When the United States become tired of lending money, other nations would be in a position to do so.

In this connection, Mr. Layton pointed to France and its increasing savings, which indicated that the world one day would have to reckon savings, which indicated that the world one day would have to reckon with that country as an issuer of foreign loans. Somebody's capital would always come to Germany; therefore there was no immediate cause for anxiety regarding reparations, Mr. Layton concluded.

John came over from Ireland to England in a washing-basket when he was quite little, and there was a label tied on saying, "Please give this puppy a drink of water." Evidently he had had some kind friends on the journey, because he got out of the basket as if nothing had happened, and made himself quite at home at once.

He is now learning all the tricks that a well-brought-up young dog should know. He understands the words "sit," "out," "no," and "yes," and some others, and can do "big jumps" very well if he sees a biscuit anywhere to be secured.

If possible he always travels by motorbus because the bus company people love dogs and let them travel for nothing. In the train he has a proper ticket of his own, and has to

One day he was in a bus and in front of him was a little girl with a tiny little bit of pink neck showing between her curis and her collar. John was sitting on his mistress's lap so he was just high enough to give a dear little kiss on it.

His mistress has a caravan on a hill, where in the summer they go for week-ends, and this is his greatest delight. He sits on the top step looking as if all the world belonged to him, so he is called "King of the Caravan." He scampers up the steps; he falls through the steps; and he slides down the steps—a mass of fat paws and puppy parts all mixed up. Then he goes up again and sits at the top, and wishes everybody always lived in caravans, where it is so easy for little dogs to he good and it does not meters. where it is so easy for little dogs to be sood, and it does not matter if you bite up a few other things be-sides biscuits.

In Boston Theaters

Joseph Santley brought his first production to the Wilbur Theater for a Boston run. In addition to gathering a large and talented company of singers and dancers, such as are to be looked for in a musical show, and giving the piece handsome contumes and settings, Mr. Santley has assembled an acting cast that would grace any light comedy without music.

There was Mrs. Thomas Whiffen, sprightly and clear of speech, smiling over memories of the days when cows roamed Broadway, back in 1860. That was the time when Prince Edward, afterward King Edward of England, visited the United States and made as pleasant an impression as his grandson, the present Prince of Wales, has on his recent tours on

The quite particular position occupied by Henrik Ibsen among the authors of the nineteenth century may be due in part to the great bustle and strife that gathered round his name to begin with, contrasted with the serenity for which his mature age became remarkable. A passionate poet, from the outset at war with the world, developed into the unrivaled dramatic author, at the same time winning such a fame for wisdom and knowledge of human nature as to make him a sage and a prophet. But though much cloudy cursoity has been thus roused, this has not contributed to making clear te the great public the true literary importance of Ibsen. To a certain extent he may still be said to be the sphinx.

Only such blographical facts shall be mentioned here as had a decided influence either on the poet's career or his literary work. His father, a well-to-do business man of Skien who had become bankrupt, apprenticed his boy at the age of 15 to the apothecary of Grimstad, an insignificant port on the south coast of Norway. Poor and lonely, Ibsen apent six years at Grimstad, writing verses in secret and even a drama, "Catilina," at the same time studying Latin in order to become a student at the University of Christiania. When in 1850 he sarryled in the capital, he was met by the strong wave of national enthusiasm which was just passing over Norway, and young Ibsen became an adept in national romanticism. It ought to be remembered that Ibsen in his early youth was a zealous patriot dreaming of a latin the remember of that Ibsen in his early youth was a gealous patriot dreaming of a latin the property: stuff from which was a zealous patriot dreaming of a latin the property: stuff from which was a gealous patriot dreaming of a latin the property: stuff from which was a gealous patriot dreaming of a latin the property: stuff from which was a particular to the property of the surface of the property of the control of the property of th When in 1850 he arrived in the capital, he was met by the strong wave of national enthusiasm which was just passing over Norway, and young Ibsen became an adept in national romanticism. It ought to be remembered that Ibsen in his early youth was a zealous patriot dreaming of a great future for his county. In accordance with the leading intellectuals of the day Ibsen came to think that his future would be bound up with a union between the three Scandinavian countries.

Ibsen has often been thought of as a philosopher or a social reformer and has too rarely been treated as an attist. His deliberate ideas and watchies are day of "The Pretenders" (Kongsembro which kings can be made). It is the earliest of the plays of Ibsen in which the psychological interest is predominant.

Dramatic Author at Twenty-Three In 1851 he was chosen, a boy of to assist the newly constituted National Theater in Bergen "as dra-matic author." This has been called the turning-point of Ibsen's life. "No Bergen in 1851," it has been said, "and no 'Doll's House' or 'Wild Duck' ultimately to follow." At any rate it is obvious that his work in Bergen became a unique preparation for his career as a dramatic author. The year 1857 saw Ibsen once more in Christiania where he was the manager of a secondary theater till 1863, the six darkest and theater till 1863, the six darkest and most difficult years in his life. Beside the outward, almost hopeless struggle for the existence of himself and his family—he had married in 58—he had to fight against a distrust of his own powers which occasionally beset him and undermined his force. A skeptical and satirical turn of mind seemed to alternate with his patriotic fervor and belief in the future.

In 1863 a political event disturbed Ibsen and exercised a decisive influence on his course. When Denmark, powers, was left alone, Ibsen regarded the neutrality of Norway and Sweden as a shameful betrayal. It

These two poems have indeed been called Scylla and Charybdis in Ibsen's production. "Peer Gynt" is remarkable above all for its unbridled fun and picturesqueness, having as its chief figure one of the half mythical and fantastical personages from the figure one of the half mythical and fantastical personages from the peasant-life of modern Norway, but at the same time full of reminiscences from Norwegian folklore. We find here and there an inimitable burst of lyrical high spirits and a luxuriant and reckless imagination. The third act is of the very quintagence of perty and puts lives in

The Government had allowed Ibsen a small traveling pen-sion and he now left Norway, his heart filled with a fury that ex-pressed itself with intense bittertessence of poetry, and puts Ibsen in the first rank of creative artists. When Ibsen was told by a Danish critic that his poem did not conform to the rules of poetic art, he with ness in poems and letters, and for 27 years he was an exile. triumphant arrogance asserted that if such were the case, "the rules must be altered," not "Peer Gynt." At Bergen he produced four pleces, but his originality was not truly revealed till he wrote "The Vikings at Helgeland," finished on his return to Christiania in 1857. It shows that Ibsen had already gained a surprising mastery of the art of theatrical writing.

Economic Problems of Russia Absorb Attention of Country

Centralized Regulation of Industrial Construction Rendered Possible by State Handling of Factories, Banks, and Foreign Trade

SPECIAL TO THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR
MOSCOW—There is no country in the world where economic life absorbs so large a share of public sorbs so large a share of public attention as it does in Russia. The yearly transfer of grain from the harvest fields to the city markets in America goes practically unnoticed, except for the business and financial sections of the newspapers. In other countries the building of new factories and electrical stations is usu-ally a matter of small general interest; in Russia it is always "first-

Russian factories often present original cost estimates for new building which prove in the end vastly underestimated. So, in building a combination plant "Altai-Polimetail" an original estimate of 5,200,000 rubles swelled into a total cost of 40,000,000 rubles before the work was completed. Another combination factory, the Bogomolovsky, cost 22,000,000 rubles instead of the 7,000,000 rubles which was first designated as the necessary sum.

There is much careless and unwise planning, as the following examples show. A hydroelectrical station was built on the River Kura, near Tiffis, the capital of Georgia, at great expense; then it was realised that Tiflis had few industrial plants to use the power. In Cheliabinsk, in the Urals, a factory was built with a capacity for turning out 150,000 plows a year; it was found that the prospective yearly orders would not exceed 25,000 plows, and the factory had to be rearranged. band to be radiated into the ether The width of radio channel required for this is less than 5 k. c., or half of that demanded by present-day radiocasters. This is an important step in the right direction Single Side-Band Receiver

Let us see how such a telephone signal can be received. Due to the absence of a transmitted carrier wave, messages from such a transmitter would not be understandable on our ordinary receivers. The carrier wave, which is steady in frequency, can be supplied locally at the receiver by an oscillating tube. Its transmission through the ether is thus made unnecessary.

In receiving signals from the transmitter illustrated in Fig. 2, using the receiver arrangement shown in Fig. 3, the local oscillator supplying the centrer wave" would be set by the operator at exactly 640 kg. (to correspond in frequency with the supplied of the state of the supplied of the state of the side-band system. Great interest sur-rounds any workable system which allows the same waveband in the ether to carry, without mutual inter-ference, twice as many conversations as it can at present. This is what single side-band transmission will do. rounds any workable system which allows the same waveband in the ether to carry, without mutual interference, twice as many conversations as it can at present. This is what single side-band transmission will do. The following paragraphs answer the questions of: "What is this system?" "How does its work?" and "What will it do?"

"What will it do?"

What is single side-band transmission? It is the transmission of apeech frequencies by the radiation of only one side band, the other side band and carrier wave being suppressed at the transmitter. Fig. 1 showing the spectrum of the ordinary transmitter may recall the description of the side bands given in the first article of this series. Here to suppress the carrier wave (the frethe carrier wave is located in the radio spectrum at its assigned frequency and the two side bands, due to modulation, are spaced equally on either side. This spacing, in frequency, is equal to the audio frequency, which energies the microquency of which is determined by the master R. F. oscillator). When the output of this modulator is passed through a filter the undesired sidehand is removed, leaving only one side-band (which varies in frequency from 30 to 5000 cycles as the voice frequency varies) to be amplified by the power amplifier and finally to be radiated from the antenna.

At the moment Fig. 1 was recorded we have assumed that a constant musical tone of 1000 cycles (1 k. c.) This system affords radiotelephony requiring only one-half the channel width required at present. It allows an increase in sharpness of tuning at the receiver without re-channel width required at present. It allows an increase in sharpness of tuning at the receiver without reducing fidelity, thus providing more selectivity. Much less power is necessary at the transmitter since the carrier wave is not radiated. Generally there is less distortion and variation in signal due to fading because the locally generated carrier is steady. These are some of the advantages that occur with single sideband transmission. When it is compled with double modulation, still other advantages appear, one of which is the possibility of a high degree of secrety when certain combinations are used.

The disadvantages are: Increased complication of apparatus, more skill required in the operation of the receiver, and in our present radiocast band, the disadvantage that all our receivers would require modification. The most serious disadvantage is the difficulty of setting and maintaining the local oscillator at the desired frequency. Assuming transmission to take place at 1000 kc. the exactness with which the oscillator must be set is 1 part in 100,000. Means are known which will overcome the demand for such accuracy. For instance, when transmitting at the shorter waves (especially in the shorter waves (especially in the shorter wave supplied with ease at this frequency where the precision of setting would be only 1 part in 2000.

It is the single side-band system (combined with double modulation) that has been selected for use in the American Telephone & Telegraph Company's transatiantic radio link between the United States and Great. Britain.

It seems logical to suppose that before very long single side-band

It seems logical to suppose that before very long single side-band transmission will grow in use for point-to-point communication at frequencies where space in the ether is at a premium, and the time will come when it will be used for the radio-casting of speech, music and vision.

The world does not know Spain because Spain has not taken the trouble to make herself known," says Senora Isabel de Palencia, the brilliant Spanish author who is now in the United States, having been sent here by the Institute was formed in 1920 for the puropse of making the culture of Spain more widely known. Bach year it sends out leading wilters, natural scientists and representatives of the most advanced thought in Spain. This year Senora de Palencia has been chosen to try to bring about a better understanding between the women of the United States; to tell how they are developing and breaking rapidly away from the Oriental conventions which have held them like prisoners for ages past. Now the women of Spain are entering the universities and all the professions, even politics; they are forming clubs and working to bring about a better understeading about better international relations and thus aid in what they feel is woman's great mission, world peace.

TO THOSE women who desire a business career in art, but where training has been purely asademic and without commercial contacts, the career of Mme. Helene Volka, expert fashionist, will preve encouraging, for Mme. Volka, through knowledge of art, instinctive taste, and ability to discern opportunity, has changed her life from that of an art connoisseur of the amateur type into that of a successful business woman who directs the fashion requirements of millions of women throughout the United States.

Prior to the war, Mme. Volka was

Prior to the war, Mme. Volka was engaged in concert work in the United States and Europe. She was, however, an expert on old textiles and embroideries and after the war however, an expert on old textiles and embroideries and after the war it happened that the directors of certain large art galleries in the United States asked her to analyze some ancient fabrics. After completing successfully this task, she was called upon to do specialized work in the interior decoration department of a large New York store. She became known as a connoisseur of textiles, and the correct and economical adjusting of fabrics to patterns. Being a strong advocate of harmony in clothes and the perfection of the general ensemble, Mme. Volka devotes much attention to had had no experience in fashion writing, her varied career had included the interviewing of distin-

To give women the training for the work of their choice, seven co-operative agricultural colonies for girls have been established. Each girl cultivates intensively a little over an acre. "Qualified women agriculturates," Miss Herstein said, "are in complete charge of the colonies and carry the entire responsibility for administration. The girl students strive to make their colonies saif-supporting even to the point of stinting themselves on food. Each year a few girls are 'graduated' and go out to work in the permanent colonies," One of the trained leaders of girls' colonies is Rachel Bendyl, who, in addition to a university education, took special agricultural training in Nancy, France. She manages, in addition to her educational work, to care for a household consisting of her husband and two children. Housekeeping Not Popular The disfavor of heusework among the feminists of Palestine, Miss Herstein explained, was due to "their deep-scated fear of being relegated to fireside occupations." The Parent

For some time there has been an urge to express my gratitude for The Parent" column, as well as for

"The Parent" column, as well as for the children's "Mail Bag," and to tell of a very happy friendship that has been formed through these channels. The "Mail Bag" has been an inspiration for my children to become contributors to our newspaper as well as more eager and interested readers. When the "Mail Bag" was first opened my small son was among the first to send in a letter, which, much to his delight, was promptly published. With an awakened interest in The Children's Page, he next composed a little poem which also found its way into print in the keenly watched column. Shortly after its publication, a letter was forwarded to him from a small boy named "Jackie," living in New York City, saying he too was a "poet" and wished that they might become friends because they both loved the Monitor. A very interesting correspondence and an exchange of books that had been read followed. Eventually, a most interesting letter from Jackie's mother was received by myself, both of us having become interested in our children's, friendship which was unfolding so beautifully. Jater, William wrote Jackie that Mother" was making a trip to Bosater, William wrote Jackle that Mother" was making a trip to Bos-on and would possibly pass through lew York City en route. Immeditely, a very lovely invitation came rom Jackie's mother for a stop-over nd visit in their home. Returning rom Boston via New York, a most lelightful evening was spent with hese new friends in their lovely nome. "Jackie, Mother, Daddy and Mary" were found to be very charm-Mary" were found to be very charmng and lovely personages. In this way, the acquaintance with this conrenial family which began in such an impersonal manner through the the columns of our much loved newspaper, has blossomed into a most happy and sweet friendship which we thank the Monitor for it.

Another Monitor friendship which is unfolding and will bear fruit in its time is that between a daughter in high school and a young English girl living in London, who are having similar experiences in entirely different surroundings. The tirely different surroundings. The cumulative result or effect of these international friendships which are now being formed between children of different countries through the medium of our Monitor cannot be estimated at this time.

The writer is most appreciative of the articles appearing on this page, and elsewhere in the Monitor, on "Adult Education." The inspiration for pursuance of further education along specific and general lines is to be found in every issue of the Monitor. Recently, a class composed of writers, musicians, teachers and others interested in good literature has been formed, under the tutorship of a high school instructor, for the study of English, composition, literastudy of English, composition, litera-ture, etc., using as one of our text-books "The Miller System of Correct English" which is regularly adver-tised in the Monitor. We are very grateful to the Monitor for bringing the good news which enabled us to secure this splendid book. (Mrs.) M. E. C.

Mrs. J. H. H.'s letter to our column Mrs. J. H. H.'s letter to our column confirms my opinion about the truth of her words: how children love to be played with and sung to and to be put to bed. My little girl used to sit on my lap and listen to me play the piano before she could walk, and she learned to sing "Baby's Boat's a Silver Moon" before she could talk. She'd stand by the piano, her wee head not even as high as the keys, and sing that song. She would retard and tempo at the proper places perfectly.

A child early learns good music if she never hears anything else, and so has a foundation for the future.

A child early learns good music if she never hears anything else, and so has a foundation for the future. Night after night after I had put my little one to bed I would play to her. When she got sleepy her ever request was for a certain favorite. Today she sings a good deal herself and plays; is always interested in music and understands it better than I do. Her tasts turned for awhile to popular music, but now she plays, for the most part, time-honored music or the beat in the new.

I would suggest to Miss K. M. that if the books of pirates her brother reads 'are standard works and he particularly delights in such books at on to believe they will be of harm to him. Many a child of his age lives in a vivid imaginary worl of his own. Booth Tarkington realized this, as you can find out by reading his "Penrod" stories. Certainly Robert Louis Stevenson is a "joy forever." His "Treasure Island" is full of pirates. Any of his books are fine. Jeffery Farnol is another; let him start out with "Black Barteimy's Treasure of his more accurate than the historian. Start out with "Black Barteimy's Treasure' and the sequel, "Martin Conlaby's Vengeance"—only he was not very vengeful. Has he read Alexander Dumass 'He will get history there in a most fascinating form. A question once came up between Dumas and a recognized historian and in looking the matter up the novelist was more accurate than the historian. Start out with "The Three Musketeers" and carry along through the five or so books that follow up the adventures of Athos, Porthos, Aramis and D'Artagnan. I surmise he will know more about Anne of "The Grand Monarque," Louis XIV. than he'd learn in weeks of history. Zane Grey is good for boys and Stewart Edward White. Every class group can have an objective, if only a monthly "concert" for and by its own members. If exchange engagements with another class can be arranged, so much the better. No special "show work" should ever be prepared for these occasions, rather the regular course of study should consist of such 'ttractive and varied material that these programs naturally compile themselves from the ingredients at hand. Neither is it necessary that every number on the program be a musical one. Talks on composers, related pictures or poems are in order, presented perhaps by the so-called unmusical one.

Britain is the home-land in a very real sense, and in men's "Home Thoughts From Abroad" there is warm affection for their Alma Mater.

The magazines also form a bond of union between home and school. The discerning parent, sister or brother who reads a youngster's school magazine with pleasure, finds a ready access to his interests and a basis for sympathy and understanding. Boys and girls in Britain are apt to be tremendously proud of their school, and to welcome keenly an intelligent interest in it.

There is a third way in which the fort might be made to interest such magazines act as a bond of union, and that is by the exchange of them between the schools. Through this exchange pupils and teachers are able to widen their outlook and to know something of the inner life of other schools. From recent issues the interesting fact emerges that exchange is now taking place beyond the borders of Great Britain. composition and transcription, by candlelight, in late evenings verging on midnight, or at early dawn, which was her favorite time for writing and meditation.

If one approaches the six published volumes from the standpoint of the twenticth century only, one may find his pleasure chiefly in dipping in here and there as interest directs; but if one approaches them, as the present writer has done, after an extended course of reading in eighteenth century history, bloggraphy, letters, and memoirs, one is likely to go through them carefully, with increasing absorption; the references, allusions, political opinions, and arguments on literary and æsthetic subjects become clear if one has a considerable knowledge of the period, and of the activities which went on in the little cathedral city of Lichfield.

The men and women in the instranks of society and of the intellectual world.

In all this achievement there is evidence of a distinctly vigorous individuality which reflets the slighting comment sometimes made upon Miss Seward as a minor poetess of negligible worth.

Of the personages whom we find pictured or addressed in the letters, Samuel Johnson is the one of greatest celebrity. Miss Seward was an intimate of "dear Lucy Porter," Johnson's stepdaughter, and therefore was always included in the group that Lucy invited to meet the Doctor upon the occasion of his visits to Lichfield. There was a connection by marriage, also, between the Porters and Miss Seward's family, so that the relationship was more than merely social. But there was no harmony between the "Great Bear,"

Not the least of the interest aroused is centered upon the authoress herself—the Swan of Lichfield as she was half-humorously or wholly seriously called. We find her a person of no inconsiderable mental power and individual charm. She is usually modest about herself; but we know, from the testimony of her friends and from her portrait by Romney, that she was a woman more than ordinarily pleasing in face and manner, with a majestic presence and a beautifully modulated voice—
Sir Walter Scott called it "lovely." We catch glimpses of the background in which she dwelt, the dignified old plance of the Bishops, facing the cathedral square. It had an extensive garden, which gave a view across a valley. "I sit writing on this dear green terrace," she writes, "feeding at intervals my little golden breasted songsters." Within, the house was furnished luxuriously, in the best eighteenth century style. It was not without its memories and traditions. In her "very dining room," as Anna Seward was fond of saying, Gilbert Walmesley, patron of promising youth, had often entertained "Sam Johnson and David Garrick" when they were stripling schoolboys, remarkable even then for the promises which their laterday's fulfilled. Miss Seward loved this home, and refused to leave it even when her better judgment told her that she would be wise to seek a less pretentious dwelling.

In the perusal of the letters we learn something of her daily tasks and avocations. A model of filial arrection, she devoted herself to her parents; she went much fint Lichellan in the generality of published letters, but not one atom of simplicity of nature." Lady Charlotte is pilotty of nature. Lady Charlotte is pilotty of nature." Lady Charlotte is pilo

Theatrical News of the World

One of those pictures was "The New York Hat," in which I played the daughter of a miser. My father declared my pancake of a head covering was good enough, though I pointed at it in woe and wept at the memory of a gorgeous creation I had seen in the village milliner's shop. When that noble edifice of straw, ribbons and stuffed birds was actually placed in my hands as a git you can imagine my transports. I expressed joy and rapture in this incident by dervish-like whirlings. In some way it leaked out that the minister knew something about that hat. In nine seconds gossips spread the word all over town. Not a minute later my stern screen father tore my beautiful hat to shreds. Another minute by the clock, and a posse waited on the minister, demanding an explanation. He showed a letter from my screen mother, written long before, bequeathing me a poor little sum that she had been able to hold out on Papa Skinfiint. With this money he had bought the hat. Tableau. The gossips were routed. Bless you, my children, and all was over within ten minutes after it had begun.

It was interesting, as those films were unrolled, to notice occasional play of today. The chase scene was a feature of many of those first pictures, and in "A Beast at Bay" there was a race between an automobile and a railway engine. That picture, too, had a real theme, the hero's overcoming of cowardice in the emergency of rescuing the girl while facing the loaded shotgun of an escaped convict. It was in "A Beast at Bay" that Mr. Griffith first carried on several threads of the story at the same time, flashing from one group of pursuers to the other, and then to the girl in the automobile who was being compelled by the convict to help him escape. The picture was a big success.

my sister Lottle and my brother Jack, such a dear little fellow. My mother, too, often appeared as a sympathetic or astonished bystander. Yet, hurried as those stories were in the telling, I notice in them bits that were really good, even according to the painstaking standards of today. Perhaps they were sometimes all the more true because they were spontaneous. They had to be right the first time as we couldn't use up our film for retakes and each day's product was half of a one-reeler or else a story of 500-foot length—called a split reel. Recently I heard of a studio bulletin indicating that a picture now in production was seven weeks behind schedule. There would have been grief in our Biograph days, if we had run seven minutes behind. If the picture for the day was finished, we would utilize the remaining time by rehearsing the next story.

An Array of Butlers
I relate all this to give a hint of how the movies "just growed" like Topsy. Today she amuses us and we love her. At times we think she needs a good spanking, and then we applaud her for an achievement of breath-taking beauty.

Some of those early films were ridiculous to me as I saw them unrolled the other day, particularly the "society" stories with butlers lined up along the porch and even stationed on the sidewalk. It was this sert of picture that made me doubt if Topsy would ever amount to anything, so I decided to return to the stage. I went back to David Belasco's management and appeared as Julliet in "The Good Little Devil." I had worked two seasons previously with him in the "Warrens of Virginia." In the summers I had returned to pictures, but had left Mr. Griffith for other managements—the Imp and Majestic—tempted by an increase in salary.

In the last five years banking integests have played a heavy part, and begun.

Yes, indeed, the movies moved in those days. The minister was Lionel Barrymore; Mack Sennett and Lilian Gish appeared as extras, and the story was by an author who now has world repute—Anita Loos. That is the sort of thing from which the picture play of today has evolved. We knew little of modern make-up and our faces and arms looked dark in the pictures. Because of the crude lighting, my blonde curls photographed black.

He would not sit through more than 15000 feet. Then Mr. Griffith, who used to say that the photo-play would never be more than 15 minutes in length, did "The Birth of a Nation," a full evening's entertain-factor in the industry. Today a big figure in the business could truth-fully remark, "I do not care who new way of telling a story was found, a form that was neither a photographed play nor a visualized novel, but a form evolved out of its own conditions of presentation. At last we had thoughts manifested in the changing expression of the eyes, and the story was almost exchanging expression of the eyes, and the story was almost exchanging expression of the eyes, and the story was almost exchanging expression of the eyes, and the story was interesting, as those films

Again, at the close of the pic-ture, the film passes into the spoken state, with no particular gain or loss.
At present, the volume of the nic accompaniment is too great for the small auditorium of the Warner Theater, literally assailing the ears to the point of violence. Further talking photoplays are promised by Warner Brothers, and no matter what the present shortcomings may be in this adventurous department of picture making, these producers are to be commended for producers are to be commended for courage and persistency in endeavoring to advance the state of film play: beyond their present two dimensional silence.

I've yey several mental impressions per pers that tell their whole stories in the headlines, photoplays that con-vey several mental impressions per second—perhaps the theater of the spoken word will become a haven of restfulness. Instead of attending of restfulness. Instead of attending the playhouse for excitement, as formerly, Mr. Mitchell wonders if the time is not coming when we shall go there to caim down from the greater excitements of the modern scene outside. All of which somehow recalls William Winter's complaint that Mrs. Leslie Carter's performance in "Du Barry" was too noisy. Right in the middle of the third act she awakened him from a pleasant nap.

As They Were Recently Eva Le Gallienne and George Abbott engaged in an infor-mal debate as to the comparative merits of Broadway drama as ma-neuvered by Mr. Abbott and repertory as carried on by Miss Le Gallienne at the Fourteenth Street Theater in New York. Dispassionate listeners were disinclined to award the victory to either side, as each upheld a different ideal, and, like Launcelot Gobbo in the historic debate with himself, both parties argued Miss Le Gallienne gave up the Broadway drama for the privilege of acting Shakespeare, Goldoni, Ibsen, Sierra and Tchekov as often as she likes, giving due consideration to the rela-tive appeal of her offerings to her subscribers. Mr. Abbott reached Broadway affluence by a long route along which he was richly pa'd only in experience. We recall his early efforts, years ago in a stock company that gave one-act plays at the Bijou Theater in Boston. One of Abbott's duties, when not acting, rehearsing or building scenery, was to keep a phonograph, which went with the early Edison talking pictures, somewhere within halling distance of the scenes

The Rise of Peggy Wood

If, as the old-timers say, it takes 30 years to make an actress, Peggy Wood is about ready to join that none too large company that is headed by Mrs. Piske, Margaret Anglin, Jane Cowl and company. Especially to Miss Wood's credit is ner persistent effort to develop her abilities, regardless of the fact that she was so fair to see and so good to hear in song that there seemed to be a general conspiracy among managers to keen her in musical comedies. It was a good while ago that Peggy Wood made her first stage appearance in the chorus of the Montgomery and Stone show, "The Old Town." Now she is playing Portia to the Shylock of George Arliss in "The Merchant of Venice." By way of variety she is giving occasional performances of Barrie's "Rosalind." A few summers ago she spent her playtime season studying with Mme. Calve. Cowl and company. Especially to

NEW BEDFORD, Mass., March 20 Hand-to-mouth trading in small lots ntinued to characterize the primary ton market last week.

There was no pronounced trend in alther direction. Duliness in the early part of the week was followed by a little activity in the middle of the week when some sellers cleaned up some of their surplus stocks at slight consessions, but when buyers tried to place larger orders at the same levels they were unable to do so.

Frint cloth trading was for small amounts. In the middle of the week a few good-sized orders were taken at concessions as, for instance, 64x60s sold usually at 7½ cents, but in the mids-week some sold for 7½ cents, although when buyers, stimulated by the rise in cotton near the end of the week, tried to place more orders at that figure the mills refused to take orders under 7½ cents; ao with 65x75s; about 5000 pleces sold at 5½ cents, but the balance of the orders were at 8½ cents. Quick delivery 80 squares brought 10½ cents, and April delivery of the same construction sold for 10½ cents.

A few sales of sheetings amounting to as much as 100,000 yards each were made but most of the orders were for commit amounts; 40-inch, 2.85-yard sold generally a following to the make, and 37-inch 4.00-yard at 7½ cents; 56x6s 4.00-yard brought 8½ cents with mills refusing offered contracts at concessions; 40 squares, 6.15-yard sold generally at 5½ cents.

Fine Goods Are Quiet

Pine Goods Are Quiet

Pajama checks were quiet, with 78x80s selling at 8%c and 88 squares at 10½c. Drills were quoted at 8¾c
net for 37-inch 3.95-yard; 30-inch 3.25-yard usually brought 9½c, although 200,000 yards were reported sold at 9¾c.

In the fine goods division the week was rather quieter than recent ones, with broadcloths easily the favorite construction. It is said that some of the finer makes are sold for three or four weeks ahead. Quick delivery 128x 68s brought 16½c, and 144x76s twoply 100s around 86c.

Combed volles moved moderately with the hard twist variety most in demand at 10½c for 60x56s. Very light trading was done in the fancy volles. Celanese volles are moving very quietly, with the most interest exhibited in those mixtures asing finer denier or multiple fiber yarns.

A few pongees sold in small lots at better prices than last week, as for instance, 72x100s, 7.00-yard brought 12¼c, compared with 12 cents the previous week
Fine lawns were moderately active, spot 72x68s, 9.50-yard sold for 11c up

sold for 13¾c.

Silk and cotton mixtures had a very

E. H. H. SIMMONS LONDON GROUP

Sees United States and Great Britain Sharing Responsibilities

America's position in international finance is due far less to economi gains which she may have made as a result of the World War than to her steady forward progress over a period of more than a century, E. H. H. Sim-of more than a century, E. H. H. Simmons, president of the New York Stock Exchange, declared in an address before the members of the American Chamber of Commerce in London.

Never, he declared, has the community of interest between Great Britain and the United States been as great as today, if for no other reason than that both are international graditor nations. Nevertheless, Mr. Simmons acknowledged the debt which American commerce and finance owe to England for the customs and practices upon which fundamental American methods are firmly based.

Mr. Simmons traced the development of resources and transportation facilities in the United States, and of banking systems and the consolidation of industrial units into efficient largespoile organisations, adding, "I stress the course of these events in American prior to 1914, because of the Common belief on both sides of the Atlantic that the present position of the United States as an international lender has been entirely due to the war. Actually, no conclusion could be more fallacious."

Scarcity of Investments

American financial markets appar American financial markets apparently face the unprecedented and seemingly paradoxical condition of a scarcity of investments rather than a scarcity of funds, and therefore there is necessary a "thorough overhauling and revaluation of many of our oldest and most familiar financial methods and procedure of the street of the and practices." the speaker continued.
Under these circumstances, he deemed it expedient to stress the conditions which "make it more necessary than ever before to arrive at a closer and ever before to arrive at a closer and more intimate accord with Great Britain—the most extensive holder of forcign securities in the world.

"In the path of such a closer financial understanding," Mr. Simmons went on, "lie several minor obstacles which frank recognition and definite effort can readily overcome."

The soundness of British financial standards were lauded by Mr. Simmons, who declared emphatically that they represented one of the greatest recent contributions of Great Britain to the civilization of the world.

Influence of London Market

Influence of London Market These standards, he said, were based on fair play and commercial integrity and were in a large measure responsible for the tremendous influence which the London market exerted all over the world and which was "a

all over the world and which was "a factor for peace and ultimately for better standards of living and government almost everywhere."
"Today." he said, "the United States has suddenly begun to share this international lending function with Great Britain, and because of this fact it is highly important that American finance closely co-operate with the finance closely co-operate with the older financial community of England older financial community of England in maintaining sound standards for international lending.

"Undue competition between London and New York might well result in a deterioration of financial methods employed by borrowing governments and business enterprises in many parts of the world. The need for closer accord between British and American finance is therefore not merely a plous sentiment, but a most important pracsentiment, but a most important prac-tical question, with large economic consequences on every hand."

See Scotland first

Every year more and more transatlantic visitors are entering Europe via Glasgow or Liverpool and making Scotland their first glimpse of the romance and beauty of the older

That is as it should be. Scotland is a veritable storehouse of history and romance. The grim, brave Covenanters were fugitives in her mountains, grim and stark as themselves. Great battles fought in the dawn of time have covered her soil with royal blood. Yet in the Trossachs and round about the Firth of Clyde, the beauty of Scotland is as gentle as a summer evening: the little homes of Scotland lie peaceful and lovely in every sheltered valley. The London Midland and Scottish Railway has two routes to Scotland-you may travel by one and return by the other.

Mrs. Aeschliman and Miss Sigourney Among Winners in Women's Singles

CHESTNUT HILL, Mass.—Six of the eight matches scheduled for the third round of the United States women's indoor lawn tennis championship singles which are being played on the courts of the Longwood Cricket Club, here, were completed this morning and all the favorites advanced to the fourth round.

Mrs. Charles F. Aeschliman, formerly Miss Leslie Bancroft, had an easy time advancing at the expense of Mrs. Huntington R. Hardwick, Brooklyn, with the loss of only one game in each set played, Mrs. Aeschliman is playing strong tennis just now and will make a good bid for the title.

Mrs. Charles J. Hubbard Jr., Cambridge, and Miss Lee Paffrey of Brooklyn, played the hardest fought match of the morning and the only one to require more than the regulation two sets, with Mrs. Hubbard finally winning, 6—4, 4—6, 6—2.

The opening matches this morning were won easily with Mrs. William M. Sheddon, wife of the former Yale University track team captain, defeating Mrs. Margaret Roosevelt of Dedham, Mass., with the loss of only one game in each of the two sets played, and Miss Edith Signurney, one of the leading candidates for the title which Mrs. George W. Wightman is not defending, losing only one game in her two sets against Miss Marjorle Sachs, Cambridge.

Miss Rosamond Newton of Brookline

Miss Rosamond Newton of Brookline and the gallery were treated to a surprise when Miss Eleanor Whiting of Cambridge forced the Brookline player to two deuce sets before she won her place in the fourth round. Miss Whiting used soft-stroke tactics and this helped her prolong the match to an hour and a half. Miss Margaret Blake, Lenox, and Miss Louise Iselin, New York, had an interesting match with the former winning, 6—2, 6—3. Both players drove hard and most of the points secured in the early part of points secured in the early part of the match were from nets and outs. Near the end of the second set both players settled down and exhibited ne good tennis.

MAPLE LEAFS AT

ARENA FOR CONTEST

The Boston Bruins wind up their regular National Hockey League schedule of home games at the Boston Arena tonight, playing the Toronto Maple Leafs. After tonight's game the Bruins do not play in Boston until April 3, the date selected for the first play-off game, which will be against either Pittsburgh, Detroit or New York Rangers. Which will be James W. Herbertis, former Bruin center, who has not bost his popularity in the city. It has been some time since the local fans have seen Herberts play, but they are formanted in one respect for he is playing in top form at present.

The Maple Leafs were contenders for a play-off position until just recently and might have made the place and in not been for the loss of Clarence H. Day and Dr. W. J. Carson timportant times during the season, Day, in fact, is still out of action and will not play until next year. Daniel Cox, a spare wing of promise, is also unable to play at this time.

GOOD PITCHERS

Baseball Team Seems to Have Strength in Every Other Department

MOSCOW, Idaho—With an oversupply of catchers and plenty of infielders but faced by a dearth of pitchers and a lack of heavy-hitters, the chances for the University of Idaho to impress the Pacific Coast Conference in baseball are not the best. However, the situation is not hopeless. If R. A. Fox, Idaho 25, the new head baseball coach, busy on the task of finding more pitching talent, makes good as a discoverer, the chances for Idaho will improve immensely. The Idaho club may be said to indicate on paper strength in every department but pitching, for Coach Fox is not as perplexed over the hitting section as he is the lack of pitchers. L TO THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR

It is a case of finding at least two new pitchers, for Idaho's two big guins in this department for the last three in this department for the last three Conference seasons received their degrees in the graduating class of last spring. Three new pitchers would be even better. The reserve strength of last season was not exceptional. Ralph Erickson and E. G. Stockdale are the two veterans who will be greatly missed. This leaves the two reserve pitchers, F. C. Lawrence '29 and F. A. Crabner '29, as the only veterans in sight. The 1927 freshman team falled to show any impressive pitching.

Strong Catching Department

Contrasted with the weakness in pitching is a catching department with five men whom Coach Fox expects to conduct a lively rivalry for regular assignment. On the basis of early workouts, for the catchers and pitching candidates have been doing indoor work since the last of February. C. G. Sullivan '28, who alternated with C. G. Sullivan '25, who alternated with L. B. Howerton, regular catcher during the 1927 season, who was graduated last spring, seems likely to receive first call. Howerton's loss is not so keenly felt because of the large supply of new candidates. Sullivan does not have the position secure by any means. C. H. Sumpter '30, regular freehman, catcher last year. P. V. freshman catcher last year; P. V. Hutchinson '29, Albert L. Frahm '28 an l Herman Ficke '30, are offering heavy competition.

Another veteran from last year who will be missed is J. C. Baird, the heavy-hitting outfielder. M. M. Lehrbas, shortstop, another excellent batter who was graduated last spring, will be missed. Coach Fox has no dependable heavy hitter in sight, but in A. C. Cheyne '29 he has a first class shortstop. G. J. Jacoby '28, who is entering baseball as his third sport for the current college year, looks best to carry on Baird's heavy duty with the bat. Frank McMillin '30, a left-hander who had an exceptional career in baseball during his high school days at Pocatello, Idaho, looks outstanding at first base. McMillin's annexing of Oklahoma in winning the title paid Another veteran from last year who hander who had an exceptional career in baseball during his high school days to 631-3 points. This bears out the impression that, even as University of at first base. McMillin's annexing of Oklahoma in winning the title paid first will likely shift G. W. Greene '28, who played this position last year, to second. Greene will be one of Coach Fox's aces this season, for he has played every infield position during his three years, and the coach says he can even pitch in case of an emergency. C. H. Murray '28 is outstanding at third base. This lineup gives Idaho the prospect of a fast infield.

Outfield talent has not been fully prospected. With the exception of Jacoby there is a dearth of veterans. Coach Fox hopes some of the freshmen will develop into creditable varsity players and upon their ability to

Despite the fact that Erickson and Stockdale, the regulars, were recognized as two of the best pitchers in the Conference, the pitching staff was not equal to the heavy load. With two games left to play Idaho led 5 games won and only 1 lost when the break in pitchers came. Idaho dropped the final two games to State College of Washington and thereby lost the lead. Idaho's new coach is a former base-hall player on this campus. During the seasons of '20, '21 and '22 R. A. Fox was catcher under Coach David A. MacMillan, who resigned last fall to become baseball coach at the University of Minnesota. After an auspictous career as high school coach, Mr. Fox was recalled by his Alma Mater to succeed his teacher. During his collegiate days Fox was one of the most dependable players on the Idaho team. Though a baseball star his work in basketball was most impressive and he captained.

WINSLOW, Ariz. (P)—Arthur Newton, leader of the parade in the $400-mile foot race from Los Angeles to New York, was forced to drop out Monday. The pace-setting British run-ner, who had a lead of more than nine hours over his closest competitor on the basis of elapsed time, was six miles along on Monday's 24.1-mile jaunt when he had to drop out. The All-events division, but fell down in his final game. The Chicago roller scored 649 in the team event, followed with 619 in the doubles, and hung up 616 in the singles in spite of a final game of 157. He had three errors and one split in the final session. His aggregate total landed him in third place in the standings. Bernard Anderson of Chicago totaled 1874 on counts of 530, 614 and 630 to take fifth position

LONDON—A remarkable atbletic "come back" stands to the oredit of H. W. Payne, a veteran member of the Woodfern Green Athletic Club who, after a lapse of five years, regained the Southern Counties individual cross-country running championship over a 10-mile course at Shenfield, Essex, in the fast time of 63m. 38s. He ran a clever race and put his last ounce of power into a grand finish.

South London Harriers, who re-

grand finish.

South London Harriers, who retained the team championship, furnished the second man home, J. G. Stubbs He caught H. Clayton of Stubbs He caught H. Clayton of Reading Athletic Club in the last 12 yards or so and just beat him to the tape. The record number of 343 runners competed and all but 36 of them finished the course. The S. L. H. packed well to earn a points total of 109 against Surrey A. C. a 141 and the Duke of Cornwall's Light Instanty's 269.

Bruest Harper, the reigning English champion and one of Britain's hopes for the Olympic Marathon at Amsterdam in August, emerged from an enforced temporary retirement to finish eleventh at Middlethorpe in the Northern Counties Championship, won by W. Beavers of York Harriers, Harper's Club, Hallamshipe Harriers, won the team event once again with 69 points, Pheffield United being second with 126 and Enristown Viaduct third with 142.

DANISH SWIMMER MAY MAKE CANADIAN TRIP

COPENHAGEN, Den.—The young Danish girl swimmer, Miss Edith Jensen, who performed brilliantly last year, has received an offer from a Canadian impresario to appear on the canadian impression to appear on the other side of the Atlantic under his management. He has contracts already with Forstad, the Norwegian; Hans Vierkotter, the German, and other long-distance swimmers.

The young lady is already a professional, and has visited Germany and Florida. She pursues her training in a hig Daniel swimping hath and in a big Danish swimming bath, and has thought of attempting a swim across the English Channel in the course of the summer. She has also had offers from a film company. She is a native of the small town of Kolding.

NEW RECORDS IN ROLLER SKATING SPECIAL FROM MONITOR BURBAU

LONDON—Roller skating, which shows signs of a return to its former popularity, especially at Cardiff, where 300 people were recently turned away from the opening session of a new rink, has yielded several fresh "records" this year, the latest batch being for two miles, all by N. Luhr, a member of the Aldwych Speed Club. The fresh figures be established, unpaced, at Holland Park Hall, just before that rink, the biggest in Europe, was given over to the motor industry, were: Two miles—6m. 24s.; three miles—9m. 53%s.; four miles—13m. 11%s.; five miles—16m. 28%s.

Party Leadership Challenged

THE first duty of the Republican Party, either through action by those who today stand in positions of leadership, or through the voice of the rank and file, is to repudiate the connivance of those who conspired with despoilers of the public domain to conceal the lavish use of money in past political campaigns. The people of the United States, regardless of partisan affiliations, have been affronted by the disclosures thus far made in the investigations into the contributions by those who sought to protect themselves against the results of illegal transactions affecting the Teapot Dome oil land reserves. Senator Borah of Idaho and Senator Capper of Kansas, themselves Republicans, have chal-lenged the responsible leaders of their party. They speak for an overwhelming majority of their partisans when they demand that the party be freed from the influence of all those in any be freed from the influence of all those in any way responsible for the effort to conceal from the public the source of the $260,000 contributed to the party's deficit in 1923, as well as those who had guilty knowledge of the plans to disguise the methods by which $160,000 of this amount found its way into the national committee's treasury. "The Republican Party." Senator Capper says, "must purge itself of the oil smudge." He believes the job will be thoroughly done. "Republican leaders must realize," he says, "that they must face the music or the party will pay the fiddler. The issue cannot be evaded. The leaders may condone. The public will not forget." will not forget."

That, concretely stated, is the position of the party as represented by the people on the one side, and the party as misrepresented by a discredited coterie of so-called leaders on the other. No general and sweeping indictment can be lodged against the millions of high-minded men and women of the United States who have looked and will continue to look to their equally trustworthy and unselfish representatives and administrators as acceptable and desirable public servants. But such an indictment will lie unless the people, being charged with knowledge of the guilty connivance of those who have proved themselves unfaithful, take steps to carry the needed purging process to completion.

It is intimated that still more damaging tlisclosures are to be made by the Senate investigating committee's witnesses. If there is evidence connecting others than those already involved with the affair which has already yielded surprising and regrettable disregard for the law. the sooner it is produced the better for the public.

It is the plain duty of Congress now, without unnecessary delay, to so fortify and strengthen the Corrupt Practices Act as to limit the amounts to be spent in national election campaigns and to compel complete disclosure of the actual source of all contributions, no matter when made. The Republican Party, following restitution, by those responsible, of the funds illegally contributed in 1923, should make it its next duty to bring about the enactment of laws which will render a repetition of such offenses as those disclosed absolutely impossible.

Legitimate Cotton Traders

TRADING in "futures," as has been the practice in cotton, grain and other basic commodities, at times lends itself easily to speculative influences. In view of this fact reated efforts have been made to curtail "futures" trading by legislation. Such efforts have borne fruit in what is known as the Cotton Futures Act, which was invoked only a few years ago, and later in the even more rigid Grain Futures Act. Under the first of these laws cotton must be tendered upon demand on any contract sold or purchased on an open exchange. Under the second of these acts a careful record of all grain transactions is kept and made to balance under government inspectors. While such laws have been criticized as hampering "futures" operations or of making difficult the free play of hedging, they have not made impossible trades in the future delivery of the commodities. In the case of cotton a new issue has arisen, so that a movement has been set on foot before the United States Senate Committee on Agriculture to revise the law and to make the regulations on cotton just as rigorous as is the case with grain trading.

Futures, or hedges as they are frequently called, are merely promises to deliver at some future date. It is a practice built up by merchants who sought to insure the future operations of the manufacturer. For instance, a cotton mill might make a contract to deliver cloth at a specified date in the future. Immediately that mill would purchase a futures contract on the market, thereby protecting it-self against any possible fluctuation in the price of the raw commodity between the time it would be necessary to obtain spot deliveries and begin manufacture. But instead of limiting futures trading, or hedges, to merchants and manufacturers, the practice has not infrequently been for outsiders to enter the market and buy or sell such contracts on the chance of a fluctuation that would render them a profit.
Such dealings have been highly speculative, and pienters, distributors, and mill men have at times had occasion to denounce them.

Since the establishment of the New York Cotton Exchange a remarkable change has come about in the handling of cotton. A considerable cotton mill industry has sprung up in the South, and with the improved transportation facilities to the northern mills it is becoming less necessary to ship cotton through New York. Deliveries at New York on New York contracts, therefore, are reputed to be merely pro forma and are effected only when necessary to comply with the present Cotton Futures Act. Efforts to broaden the New York contract so that delivery can be made at points in the South have so far not been successful. Also cooperatives have sprung up among planters, a notable one being in Texas, which co-operatives are able to store and hold their cotton for a favorable market.

Even the critics of speculative trading are ready enough to acknowledge that there is no desire to curtail an open and free market for the commodity. Open trading such as that done upon the exchanges at New York, New Orleans and Chicago assures in the main a quick and fair quotation on cotton. The only danger recognized is when speculators get active and trade without any sincere desire to accept or give delivery of the actual staple. The problem is how to insure traders against such operations without impairing the usefulness of any of the

So Goes the Revolt

TIKE those conjuring cartoonists who are wont to depict their prohibition character as a marplot and a kill-joy, unkempt and repulsive, other opponents of the Eighteenth Amendment who write instead of draw are persistently prestidigitating into phrases some imagined revolt against the purposes and administration of the prohibition law. Both of these pictures falsify the facts.

The symbolic methods, for example, of some newspaper artists are subtly persuasive—methods which, when turned to truthful delineations, have rendered signal public service. Boss Tweed once said that he would have given more to put an end to Thomas Nast's penetrating cartoons in the old Harper's Weekly than to have silenced the whole opposition press. Today an effort is being made to associate highly undesirable qualities with the supporters of prohibition and to link most unhappy conditions with its opera-tion. This cannot be successfully done. The "cup that cheers" has always been a misnomer, as Mayor "Jimmie" Walker, himself, testified but a short time ago when he announced that he had "gone on the water wagon," even against his own desires! Eight years under the Eighteenth Amendment have shown that it is prohibition which has brought cheerfulness to thousands of homes, savings to thousands of new bank accounts and economic strength to the extent of billions of dollars to the entire Nation.

The effort to discover any widespread public sentiment that is turning against these conditions requires the same inverted mirror employed by the conjuring cartoonist. Each new Congress elected since its enactment has been consistently friendly to the laws necessary for its adequate enforcement. In public thought the difficulties of the administration of the prohibition law have never outweighed the evils which prohibition has already overcome.

To this end an illuminating bit of evidence has just come to hand from the State of Pennsylvania. It is in the form of a circular letter sent out by a Pennsylvania newspaper. "This newspaper," the letter reads, "must have 2500 additional subscribers. . . . This necessity grows out of the fact that our efforts in the direction of of subscribers.

And so goes the revolt against prohibition!

Eskimo Aid to Aviation

MEMBER of the Dominion Parliament recently called attention to the fine service rendered to Canadian aviators by an Eskimo on the Hudson Strait air patrol. He asked whether the Government proposed to reward the Eskimo, named "Bobby," whose knowledge of conditions in the icebound North contributed so much to the safe return of two airmen when they were forced to alight on the ice of the Atlantic Ocean far out from land.

The work of the air patrol is to observe maritime conditions along the route that will have to be followed by shipping lines when the great experiment of establishing an ocean port, with railway terminals at Fort Churchill on the Hudson Bay, is ready for trial. Reliable data on the length of the season of navigation through the Hudson Strait is being collected. Observation stations with aircraft and wireless have been established along the coast line of the Hudson Strait, across Ungava Bay to the northernmost tip of Labrador. The Canadian aviators have been on duty throughout the winter, flying across to Baffin Isand, observing the drift of the ice, making aerial photographs, and generally recording the state of the weather and the sea for navigation purposes. On a recent trip, operating at the Atlantic entrance of the Hudson Strait, the airmen in one of the patrolling aircraft were unable to locate the landing station at Port Burwell, owing to fog. After vainly searching for several hours, they were forced down for lack of gasoline. They were under the impression that they had landed somewhere in Ungava Bay, west of the station, but after one day's march east they discovered that they were on the Atlantic ice, east of Labrador. They were accompanied by an Eskimo, as it is the practice of the airmen on the Hudson Strait patrol to take an experienced Eskimo guide with them when they set out for a survey trip. With the equipment and supplies they could salvage from the abandoned flying machine, they were able to reach land and to march safely back to Port Burwell. In the brief official report to Ottawa, the airmen gave credit to the Eskimo guide, and to other friendly Eskimos whom they met on the way back along the icebound coast of Labrador.

The Eskimo "Bobby" will doubtless be fittingly rewarded. The incident has helped to heighten the appreciation of Canada for the native dwellers of the North. Explorers have long appreciated that the Eskimos have something to contribute to human welfare. Until recently, it might have seemed far-fetched to say they had something to contribute to aviation. But the day will possibly come when there will be regular air lines across the polar regions between Europe and the Orient. The polar route would have the advantage of being a daylight trip in summer. Eskimo "Bobby" may prove to be the forerunner of a gallant company of Eskimo

Unemployment and Politics

THAT in certain regions of the United States there are considerable numbers of unemployed cannot be questioned, and there is nothing to be gained by ignoring an evident fact. At the same time it is unfortunate that these adverse conditions should be misrepresented by such highly colored statements as have recently been given out, to the effect that 5,000,000 or more workers are idle, for the general circulation of figures that are largely guesswork must inevitably result in checking industrial activities. If the heads of the country's manufacturing industries are persuaded to believe that the buying power of a large percentage of the population is likely to be seriously curtailed they will naturally be inclined to restrict their output, thus making conditions worse.

It is perhaps only natural that the opposition to the party in power for seven years should take advantage of what seems to be an opportunity of making votes by questioning the claim that the manufacturing, transportation and financial prosperity of that period has been due to Republican legislation and administration. Politicians who are accustomed to claiming all the credit for favorable conditions in trade or industry must expect that their opponents will be quick to blame them when anything goes wrong. In so far as the belief that prosperity depends upon legislation affects political controversies it may be wholesome to have the limitations of governments in dealing with fundamental economic laws clearly stated, even though the motive be one of partisan advantage. Criticisms of the theory that prosperity depends upon laws, however, should not be made an excuse for pessimistic representations that may adversly affect industry in general.

An Escape Into Legend

SOMETIMES it would appear that this twentieth century is given over largely to practicality, absorbed in commercial progress and in those efficiency measures best suited to promote it. And so we are ready to mark it down an age overwhelmingly materialistic, when all at once men take fire at the astounding exploit of a Lindbergh, figure of sheer romance if ever one existed, and the rise in General Motors matters less than nothing at all. Or else there is a tremendous agitation over the preservation of some historical or even some wholly legendary landmark, with never a stray thought for how this will affect a country's economic or financial prestige.

Just now plans are on foot in England to raise money with which the National Fund shall purchase Church Cliff, at Tintagel, Cornwall. Why? Because here was the home of King Arthur! Winchester proudly displays the famous Round Table, "Almesbury" has its cherished association with Arthur and Guinevere, Glastonbury saw the end of a kingly career, but Tintagel witnessed its traditional beginnings. For Uther Pendragon was gone from his earthly kingdom of Britain and, when an heir was required, naturally Merlin contrived to supply this need. According to Tennyson:

And then the two Dropt to the cove, and watch'd the great sea fall, Wave after wave, each mightier than the last, Till last, a ninth one, gathering half the deep Roaring, and all the wave was in a flame; And down the wave and in the flame was borne A naked babe, and rose to Merlin's feet, Who stoopt and caught the babe, and cried, "The King! Here is an heir for Uther!"

At first glance Church Cliff may resemble many another promontory thrusting its rocky shoals far out into the glimmering haze of the Cornish sea. It is almost an island, ascended by a narrow rock-hewn path which stops abruptly before a ruined arch in which there is actually a door, locked. Even today one may unlock the door of King Arthur's castle! Beyond may be little else than bowlder-strewn pasture where discouraged sheep graze and bleat, with here and there a stretch of rough wall still erect or the trace of an ancient foundation. Yet a little imagination and one has reconstructed a former scene: massive castle walls, awesome drawbridge, flag-bedecked turrets, to the accompaniment of clanking chains, pattering hoofs across a courtyard, the sharp contact of armor upon armor-and through all the distant booming of the surf.

Perhaps scholars have no documents to prove there ever was a king in Britain by the name of Arthur. How extraordinarily little documents matter! How fiercely one defends Arthur's memory and protects every relic, however remotely, however unreliably, connected with this glowing figure. How much more actual he is than scores of kings to whom historians affix firm dates and conclusive accomplishments. Again one asks, Why? Because of the poets, assuredly, all the way from the Welsh bards to Edwin Arlington Robinson. It all goes to show what a supreme place poetry and legend fill in our lives. One anticipates an eager tumbling of coins into the coffers of the National Fund.

Editorial Notes

One of the officials of the New York Public Library recently stated that before prohibition it was a common thing to see intoxicated and half-intoxicated people slip into the various rooms "for no other purpose than to doze off the effects of the poison they had drunk." He added that since prohibition such visitors are as "scarce as white mice."

A New York bank employee was twelve hours late when he reported for his first day's work in March, 1888, due to the blizzard. But he has never missed a day's work since. Hence his office associates marked the fortieth anniversary with flowers and other gifts—a pleasing recognition of faithful service.

Doubtless many members of the Republican Party are coming to the conclusion that political machinery can be operated without oil.

The Gateway of Two Worlds

IRECTLY before me, as I sit upon the hotel terrace, is an heroic statue. It is a compelling memorial, and for myself I never can regard it without something of a thrill. Beyond it stretches the sea, north, east, west. And from the shores of that sea and all its ports, from the ports of all the seas that lie past those far-reaching horizons, the extended arm of that mighty figure seems to welcome the ships men have built or may build through time to come here to this gateway of two worlds.

In the serenity of that face which gazes tranquilly seaward there is declared the successful achievement of high endeavor and the fulfillment of noble ideals. Thus De Lesseps stands at the entrance to Suez and gives ships and men bon voyage through the gateway of two worlds. The hotel terraces, its balconies and its windows regard the passage here of the mightiest traffic of all the seas. Almost every hour sees the arrival, from Occident or from Orient, of a great ship. All the flags of the maritime nations of the world are familiar sights from these palmshaded gardens and from yonder breakwater which stretches miles seaward protecting the great gateway from encroaching seas and shifting sands.

While I have been writing this morning no less than five mail liners have passed flying the flags of England, France, Italy, Germany and Holland, totaling in tonnage more than 70,000, carrying tourists, far-trading merchants and world-wanderers, bearing priceless burdens from corner to corner of the world.

Little recked De Lesseps, dreamer and master of his dreams, of the stupendous nature of his achievement here, of its unreckonable value to men in the ages to come. What if today that bronze figure, so accurate in the repose of its features, so sympathetic in its welcoming extended arm, might for a single hour regard with seeing eyes the activities of the gateway of two worlds? Here almost at its very feet, so close to the hotel terrace that I can hear the conversation upon its decks, is anchored a great Italian ship.

While she is being fueled, its passengers, bound to the picturesque ports of the east African coast and to Durban and Cape Town, are ashore enjoying the sights of the city which sits beside the gateway, in their wanderings pertinaciously pursued by eager Egyptians with artificial amber, synthetic sapphires and Birmingham bracelets. But that is part of the activities of every eastern port. + + +

Of keener interest is contact with the passengers of other ships, also coaling or "oiling" at Port Said. Yonder lies a great P. & O. liner, a new ship of consummate beauty, her favored passengers having laid for their pleasure a curious sort of pontoon bridge which leads from her gangways to the quayside and thus deprives a score of shouting boatmen of what they deem their legitimate spoils.

Farther out in the stream is anchored a great cruiser a thing of sharp lines and unbelievable speed, at her stern floating the world-encircling emblem which gives every Anglo-Saxon a thrill wherever he sees it-the flag of the British Empire. From her gangways to the shore dart swift launches bearing gold-laced figures at whose approach 100 peddlers, Levantine Jew, Greek and Egyptian. withdraw in haste to seek more fertile fields among boat- by the gateway of two worlds.

With regularity unfailing as the rise of the afternoon breeze over the Mediterranean the ships arrive. Scarce is a berth vacated but another occupant is at hand. Scarce have the winches drawn from the murky waters one great anchor but the chains of another rattle stridently through the hawse pipes. Outside await still others, and along the far horizon in unending procession night and day they approach from all the ports of all the world. A day or a week here beside the great gateway and one comes to such a realization of the extent of the water-borne traffic of the world as almost to become bewildered. Yet every day of every month through all the year the same procession passes. The traffic of one day may surpass that of another. There are "quiet" days and there are "busy" days. But the weekly, or at least the monthly, average is the same; and when one reflects upon it one finds it almost incredible that there are so many ships upon the seas.

Yet there are certain ships which may not pass through the Canal because of their immense size. How De Lesseps, who thought to build for all the maritime development within the power of men through unreckoned time, would have marveled at the mere idea of ships too big to pass through his gateway! They are few, however, although in their number they represent an immense tonnage and swell to proportions almost unbelievable the fleets of the world as reflected upon by the observer beside the gateway of Occident and Orient.

As the afternoon wanes and the seldom-failing sunlight of Egypt lessens in intensity, it is fascinating to sit here close by the Mediterranean entrance to Suez, or perchance to walk for a mile along the breakwater over which the softening breeze no longer flings showers of spray. In these Arab fishing dhows here in the lee of the great wall and that noble liner just rounding the outer abutments the extremes of the maritime achievements of men are before

Between those extremes there is comprehended, in the shipping here, almost the entire range of marine activity. Beyond the breakwater awaits the diminutive pilotboat flying the green flag of the Egyptian Government, and close by is a modern sand-dredger or two, at work night and day that the gateway may not be clogged by the ever-shifting sands of the Mediterranean.

Anchored yonder is a trim white yacht and slowly past her, bound from Orient to Occident, moves a weatherscarred and rusty "tramp" bearing the name of Durban Maru. Amid a terrific uproar a beautiful French liner is preparing to get under way for the Far East, the clatter of her winches scarce noticeable in the clamor of 100 boatmen alongside.

A deep-laden "Blue Funnel" ship anchors just outside the Channel, her holds filled with a wondrous cargo of the spices and silks and art objects of the Orient. And along the western and northern horizon, their smoke streamers barely discernible in the gathering twilight, come others and yet others, bound from the ports of the West into the magic, ever-calling East, to the cities of Kipling and the isles of Conrad.

Here surely, if ever, is romance; for all things of the sea and pertaining to the sea and encompassing the sea are here where De Lesseps stands with welcoming arm

Notes From Buenos Aires

WITH the end of summer in sight preparations are already being made for the forthcoming winter season. The most important feature of this year's art exhibitions will be the official collection of pictures by prominent English painters, sent out by Sir Joseph Duveen, and to be exhibited in Buenos Aires under the patronage of Sir Malcolm Robertson, Great Britain's Ambassador to the River Plate, who has done so much to further the cause of British culture in Argentina. The collection includes work by men such as Augustus John, Orpen, Brockhurst and Brangwyn, all of whom, excepting perhaps the last named, are practically unknown in thi country. Since Argentine artists have been in the habit of declaring that English art ended with the great masters of the eighteenth century, it will be interesting to listen to their views when some of the most brilliant of modern painters exhibit their canvases in Buenos Aires.

4 4 4 The steamship Empress of France arrived not long since in Buenos Aires with its 450 tourists, all eager to become acquainted at first hand with a city which of late has been so much to the fore in the world's press. The weather, which is pleasantly cool with a blue, clouddappled sky, and a fresh breeze blowing in from the river, is perfect for the purposes of sight-seeing, though actually quite unusual for this time of the year. Though there are few beauty spots outside the city itself and practically no places of historic interest, Buenos Aires is well worth visiting. For here in the long, straight streets old and new form a fitting background for the amazingly cosmopolitan character of its inhabitants, and twenty different tongues can be heard spoken during a short ten minutes' walk through the business quarters of the city.

 *  The Mayor of Santiago de Chile has lately published a decree designed to regulate the newsboy situation here. "Newsboys," it reads, "are henceforth forbidden to shout out their wares. They must wear a uniform, be able to read and write, are to bathe once a fortnight, and they shall not swear." A similar decree would certainly find favor among the foreign residents of Buenos Aires who. like the Mayor of Santiago, have no eyes for the alleged picturesqueness of the local "canillitas" in their rags and tatters, who shout themselves hoarse from gray dawn to dusky evening.

Tucumán oranges will in future rival South African fruit in the London markets. England, one of the biggest consumers of oranges in the world, recently imported a trial shipment of fruit from Corrientes and Tucumán, the produce of this latter Province being received very favorably by Londoners. The Central Argentine Railways has promised its assistance by granting a heavy rebate on reight of all oranges destined for exportation to England and there seems to be every reason why a new industry should be built up to help the northern provinces on the road to prosperity.

The All-British Flight advertising campaign has made its bow to the Argentine public. The flight is to be over some 20,000 kilometers and calls are being made at some 160 towns where over 3,000,000 leaflets will be distributed. The machine circles over the towns, and leaflets are thrown down, after which a landing is made, the wings are folded back and the machine is towed into some suitable place for exhibition, where it remains some five or six hours in order to give everyone a chance of seeing it. The names of the firms, all of which are British, their addresses and the articles that they wish to advertise, are painted on the machine, as well as printed on the leaflets. The scheme, which is refreshingly novel, has received the support of the British Ambassador, and success should attend this new venture to push British goods.

The recent elections in the Province of Santa Fé, connected with the presidential elections, came as a surprise to most. This Province returned an overwhelming "personalista" majority which, together with the recent triumphs in the Province of Tucumán, assures the majority of this party in Congress and the probable election Bernardo Irigoyen-who was President of the Republic during the war years. Irigoyen, who is somewhat of a mystery, and whose popularity among the lower classes is undoubted, has as his slogan: Argentina for the Argentines. If he becomes President it will mean a further strengthening of the nationalist policy.

4 4 4 Out in the "camp"-a term used to denote pampas grass lands of the provinces—the absence since S of heavy rains is making itself felt, particularly in the northwestern corner of the Province of Buenos Aires, where are to be found some of the oldest and wealthiest estancias in the Province. Maize, in particular, has suffered as a consequence of the drought.

4 4 4 The streets of Buenos Aires are, according to a municipal ediet, to be widened considerably in order to aid in solving the traffic problem, which becomes more and more complicated. Calle Corrientes, in the center of the city, where are to be found the principal theaters and halls, is already andergoing a process of transformation which at present only serves to complicate the confusion which it was designed to remedy. Several other streets will be similarly rebuilt. When this change has been completed the city will gain considerably in beauty and spaciousness.

"Permanent Aid for the Middle West"

TO THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR: I have studied with interest your recent editorial, "Permanent Aid for the Middle West." It is clear that transportation cost adds to the price at which produce must be sold when it reaches its market, and to the price of the wheat which the miller receives whenever i comes to his mill. It is not quite so clear that the saving which may be effected by the use of inland waterways must reach the pockets of the producer, or that it cannot be commandeered for use in their bank accounts, by the very properly wide-awake men who are identified with the grain trade. There is a very logical presumption, indeed, that neither of these things would result: the probabilities are that the savings in cost of transportation would simply results in leasuing the flust setting. tion would simply result in lessening the final selling price of the product, and that as far as profits are concerned the producer would stand just about where he stands now.

The producer believes that when he can control his product, selling it just as the needs of the consumer require that it be sold, he will have more to say about the price he will receive than he has now, and will have a situation somewhat comparable to that which the dustrialist enjoys, and that is the end for which he

That the individual farmer cannot name his price is obvious. To organise the strength to control has, for a number of reasons, been impossible to date. Indeed it is questionable that it would be to the best interest of the public that its food supply should be altogether in con-trol of the single interest which produces it.

This, however, the producer feels, would not be a worse condition than is the present one, for in it he finds himself at the mercy of every element which abounds in human nature, as well as with economic conditions that, at certain seasons, flood the markets with his produce and break the prices for him.

He wants neither of the situations suggested, to exist. That is why he seeks a governmental policy-one will be of a permanent nature. He knows that to sell the fruits of one's labor is proper and right, and he also understands that the legitimate interests of the public must be safeguarded. A permanent policy that will secure to him a just return for the service he renders, while it protects the public against prices for its food that are upjust, is the one situation which he wants, and for which he believes he has a right to strive.
